winsetup's value set to AutoInstall keeps it from being executed. I ran the cmd to double check what the Windows Installer had to say about this: `msiexec /i "C:\Users\Daniel\Downloads\Windows-Setup-Release-Web-Deploy.msi" /qn` The reply was: Windows Installer Service (Setup) - C:\Users\Daniel\Downloads\Winsetup-Release-web-Deploy.msi /quiet /norestart This is not a "misbehaving".winsetup file but a relatively common occurrence in our business. We use the same.winsetup for all Windows 7 installations and there are roughly five times as many.winsetups as.msisis. I have not found a resolution to this problem. Is there a fix? A: I found a Microsoft blog post that shows a workaround that may help. It is a little bit of a mess, but it may help. It doesn't address my original question though - we don't seem to have a problem with the updated.winsetups themselves. The only thing is that the underlying.msis file seems to have become corrupt. Anyway here's the blog post: Searching for an explanation for the occurrence of respiratory signs in dogs with confirmed or suspected heartworm disease. During the past 2 years we have observed a highly variable incidence of respiratory signs among dogs that had received a diagnosis of heartworm disease (HWD). While respiratory signs were observed in some dogs with confirmed or suspected HWD, most of these dogs did not exhibit clinical signs of disease. An apparent difference in the incidence of respiratory signs between dogs with and without HWD led to this investigation. Heartworm antigen was not detected in samples from the tracheas or lungs of any of the affected dogs. Necropsy examination of lungs and tracheas revealed moderate to severe, acute to chronic bronchointerstitial pneumonia with fibrin and cellular debris in airways. Although direct inoculation of heartworm antigen into the trachea of dogs did not cause clinical signs of disease, it is speculated that the pulmonary lesions were caused by antigen-antibody complexes.
